Please print. (Please do not staple checks)

Would you relish the opportunity to talk at length to opposing parties, with little or no interference or objection from their counsel, to see just what they have to say about your case? Ditto for witnesses?

Of course, the discovery rules allow for just that but if you don't learn everything deponents have to say including the "bad stuff" they may say at trial, then you are not taking full advantage of the deposition tool and the discovery rules.

Learn how to do it right from an experienced trial attorney. This seminar will also address ethical issues that typically arise surrounding client and witness preparation, production obligations and privilege concerns.
